Investing for your Pension Date

The Over 15 Year Gilts Index Fund aims to capture the returns of the UK gilt market. It tracks the FTSE A Government (Over 15 Year) Index and invests in long-term gilts.

Different investment classes have different levels of volatility and risk which means that the levels of return vary greatly. The suitability of one investment class over another therefore changes throughout your working life. This Fund is likely to be of specific interest to members who are nearing their pension date.

Gilts pay a fixed rate of interest and have the security of being issued and backed by the UK Government. They offer greater security than equities because their price and therefore their value tends to be less volatile. However, although gilt prices are less volatile their capital value is linked to interest rates and will fall when interest rates are rising and rise when interest rates fall.

Generally, reduced risk means a lower return and gilt returns have historically been lower than equity returns over the long-term.

Mid to long-term investment horizons

If you have a mid to long-term investment horizon you will usually be aiming to maximise growth in your pension account and so will probably be investing mainly in equities.

As you near your pension date

However, as you near your pension date, you may want to reduce the volatility of the value of your pension account. You can do this by moving part or all of your pension account out of equities and into bonds.

You will also be thinking about buying an annuity and you may want to ensure that the value of your pension account starts to move in line with the cost of buying an annuity. Annuity providers use bonds to back their annuities. Adopting the same investment approach, as annuity providers, that is investing in bonds, will therefore provide some protection against changes in annuity prices as you get near to your pension date.

Market Highlights Over 12 Months to 30 June 2010

Through the past twelve months the developed world has emerged from the worst economic recession in more than seventy years. With the global economy in decline and the financial system left battered from the financial crisis, world leaders concentrated on formulating strategies to rebuild the banking sector and bring major economies back to growth. As a result, central banks and governments across the globe coordinated ways of stimulating their economies which resulted in official interest rates being reduced towards zero in major developed markets and the introduction of 'quantitative easing' (essentially creating new money) measures in America and the United Kingdom.

The weight of the extraordinary measures undertaken proved effective. Financial markets rallied through the majority of 2009 as signs of life began to return to developed economies and investors began to price in the economic recovery. However, markets remained highly volatile as investors debated the timing and strength of the recovery. While economic data and news from the corporate sector initially surprised many with their strength at the start of 2010 the global economic recovery has begun to take on a more subdued pace as the year has progressed. During the past few months a number of significant concerns have come onto the radar. Most significantly, high government debt levels in much of the developed world have been brought into focus as a result of fears surrounding the ability of a number of Southern European economies (particularly Greece, Spain and Portugal) to service their ever expanding deficits.
